ADAP Advocacy Association Blog Recognized by KwikMed; 16 Five Star Rated AIDS Information Sites & Blogs

For Immediate Release

WASHINGTON, D.C. (July 9, 2012) – The ADAP Advocacy Association, also known as aaa+, today announced that its weekly blog about the AIDS Drug Assistance Programs (ADAPs) has been recognized by KwikMed as one of the “16 Five Star Rated AIDS Information Sites & Blogs” for excellence due to the contribution its top quality editorial offers the AIDS information world. This year, KwikMed's specialist panel of judges reviewed hundreds of different sites from across the Internet before hand-picking the very best for each category. The aaa+ blog is among the elite selection of awardees that their judges felt made a real contribution to the AIDS information category.

“We’re honored to have our weekly blog about the AIDS Drug Assistance Programs recognized for its contribution,” said Brandon M. Macsata, CEO of the ADAP Advocacy Association. “It has been a collaborative effort, drawing upon the collective expertise of numerous ADAP stakeholders from across the country. Without their insight and willingness to share their expertise, our blog wouldn’t stand out.”

The KwikMed summary about the blog reads, “The AIDS Drug Assistance Programs blog looks directly at the American governments role or non-role in funding the ADAPs AIDS Drug Assistance Program for people with HIV and AIDS. While political in the sense that it discusses government policy, the site is neutral and sticks to key information regarding ADAP programs, drugs, tests and the ADAP Leadership Awards. It provides detailed information about everything related to the federal government’s role in drug funding, but also covers HIV and other STD related events and programs such as the National Hepatitis Awareness Month and whether home testing kits by pharmaceutical companies should be released for general use.”
