ADAP Advocacy Commemorates World AIDS Day 2025

The White House Ignoring This Solemn Day Doesn't Negate Advocacy

WASHINGTON, D.C. – ADAP Advocacy today calls on patients, patient advocacy organizations, and their allies to rise and meet the challenges being imposed on the HIV Community by a hostile administration. World AIDS Day, themed “overcoming disruption, transforming the AIDS response” this year, embodies the collective response needed to end the HIV/AIDS epidemic on this solemn day, December 1st.

Brandon M. Macsata, CEO of ADAP Advocacy, stated, “For 37 years, December 1st has symbolized the dual message of remembrance for the lives lost to AIDS, but also a symbol of hope for a brighter future grounded in the belief that one day, we will end the HIV epidemic. People living with HIV don’t need a proclamation from the White House to embrace the symbolism behind the names on the AIDS Quilt, or the deeply rooted meaning of the Denver Principles, or lingering hope that our pharmaceutical partners will one day arm us with a cure for this disease. The White House can keep its empty promises to end the HIV epidemic, and we advocates will continue to fight the good fight regardless of the dangerous policies being pushed by senseless politicians.”
